Teacher Training Program

The AGL Education Project is a pilot project aimed at improving the quality of English education and raising the overall English language abilities of locals in the municipalities of Shuakhevi and Khulo, both of which are affected by the construction of the Adjaristsqali Hydropower Project. The project consists of three components: teacher trainings, gifted and talented student after-school enrichment activities, and contests and student recognition.

AGL's teacher training program focuses on building local English teachers' language and pedagogical skills through a combinations of direct instruction and practical activities such as mock lessons.

These projects have been underway since the end of February 2015 and finished at the end of the school year in June.

These projects help provide several significant benefits to local communities by raising the overall level of English in the region.

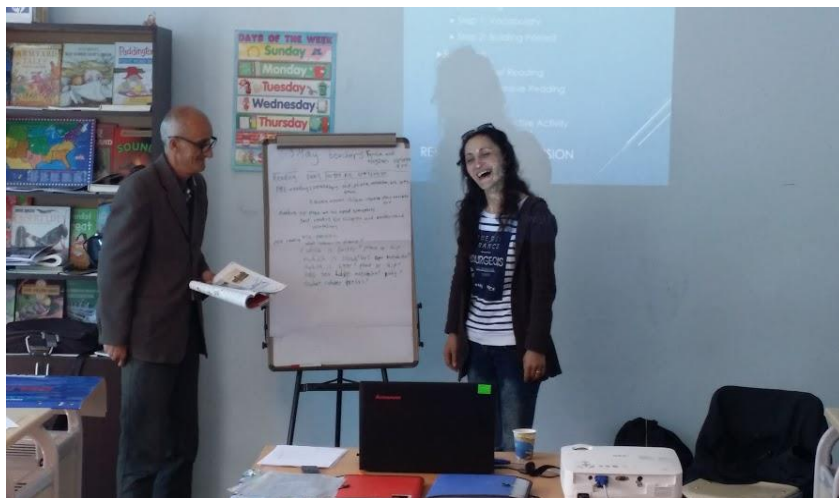

Improving local knowledge of English will lead to a more employable workforce, which benefits both AGL and the local community as well as Georgia as a whole.

The English teacher training program is helping to improve local teachers' abilities to use, and in turn, teach the English language and encourage them to use English more confidently and more frequently in the classroom.
